What's On My Mind?

by John Ballotti

MARINE LIFE PROTECTION ACT—UPDATE

As many of you probably know by now, the California Fish and Game Commission by-passed the Department of Fish and Game's preferred alternative and created a new alternative, more restrictive to fishing. The environmentally oriented plan calls for a series of marine protection areas along 220 miles of coastline from Half Moon Bay to Point Conception. The panel approved the creation of 29 marine protection areas encompassing about 200 square miles. Is this the end of the world for recreational anglers in California? No, but it may be the beginning of the end. It is not that we do not recognize the need for a well-managed fishery. It is because the process, which resulted in the approval of a non-public input plan, is flawed at best, audaciously biased, and worst case corrupt. The Marine Life Protection Act of 1999, languished without significant activity until resuscitated by an influx of private money provided by environmental groups. By accepting private money from organizations that have a vested interest in the outcome, the public process began its descent down the slippery slope starting with conflict of interest, making stops at backroom deals with private agendas along the way. "Money talks" was never more meaningful than in the creation of the marine protection areas along the central coast. I wonder what the outcome would have been if public money funded the MLPA as originally intended.. We will never know, however, we now have a glimpse of that to expect as the enviros set their sight on Southern California. If the past can predict the future, then a well-managed fishery will not be the result.

The inherent flaw in dealing with fishery management by only creating marine protection areas is that nobody told the fish. It is the equivalent of a doctor saying the operation was a success but the patient died of other complications. Fish travel—some great distances, others not so far. They are not going to stay in the marine protection areas throughout their life cycle. A well-managed fishery must deal with the complete marine biosphere. This includes gill nets, bottom trawling, long line, water quality, size and take

September 25 Dinner Speakers are: The LARRC Tackle Guys

Back by popular demand the thumbs up, thumbs down tackle rating duo Sal Vallone and Michael Grossman. Michael is recently back from the annual tackle manufacturers show in Las Vegas and Sal will be stocking many of the new products debuted at that show. They will have available for discussion and examination some of the most interesting new products including the award winning Best in Show saltwater reel from Penn—the Torque. Also on hand Shimano's new inshore Curado 300DSV. Be there!

Channel Islands Fishing Under Fire!

The Channel Islands National Marine Sanctuary currently lacks the authority to regulate fishing. This was established in their original Charter with the State of California. They now seek to break this agreement. All recreational fishermen must oppose this. See story on page 9.

limits. The marine protection area implementation may be a success, but until the indiscriminate killers are mentioned are eliminated, water quality improved, and rational science based size and take limits established, the future of our fishery will be dead on arrival. ■

LARRC'S TWILIGHT TRIP

The first Los Angeles Rod and Reel youth fishing trip departed Dock 52 in Marina Del Rey on Saturday, August 5 bound for the sand bass grounds in Santa Monica Bay. Chartermaster, Bob Selvin, greeted everyone upon arrival for the twilight charter. The 16 adults and 24 kids lined up to board the boat R & R for an evening of fishing and catching whatever the ocean would offer up.

With bait on board, the time to the fishing grounds was a brief 35 minutes. Exiting the harbor, we were greeted by a stiff wind and lumpy seas. The sky was clear, promising a spectacular sunset. Mother Nature did not disappoint. As the sun went down over Point Dume and lights on shore began to twinkle, the memory of the horrendous traffic on the 405 began to fade. San Bass starting coming over the rail with regularity with barracuda occasionally jumping on thrown swim baits. Never wide open, the bite continued sporadically throughout the night. The wind was relentless, causing the skipper to reset as he was pushed off the spot. It didn't seem to bother the kids. Whether it was at the rail or in the galley enjoying the free food, their energy and spirits were high.

Sometimes, as adults, we forget what it is like to see the world through the eyes of a child. The presence of harbor seals and sea lions, often scorned by adults, were the source of endless amusement and wonder for the kids. If you have never volunteered or been a part of a club event involving children, you owe it to yourself to participate and see the smiling faces and happiness which result when a child discovers something new.

Editors Note: Yes the 405 is often a parking lot. This was exacerbated by some kind of political demonstrations at Wilshire government buildings and the clogging of those off ramps.

LARRC congratulates Bob Selvin for arranging this successful outing. ■

MIKE GROSSMAN ON THE ISLAND TAK

After the past couple of trips on "the Tak" which produced WSB bonanzas our group was anxious for and overdue for a good day of Calico fishing. You know, one of those days where everything just comes together...weather, water conditions, and the fish willing to play. That was just what we were treated to yesterday (July 26) aboard the Island Tak when Capt. Steve Kelly decided to fish down the coast instead of going to Santa Cruz (where the WSB bite had died off)

For six hours we had full throttle just about non-stop action. I doubt if there was any time during that period when we did not have a couple of people hooked up and a lot of the time it was almost everyone working a fish.

The quality was there, too, many fish in the three pound and up range. They ate the finbait (sardines and anchovies) and they ate the plastics and even a couple of fish on the iron. Topper for the day was this seven pounder caught and released by LARRC past president Joel Zide. ■

KING OF THE CALICOS...RANDY IS DANDY! Report by Steve Ex.

I must come clean and admit, that in the days leading up to July 28, and the King of the Calicos Tournament, I ran the same question through my head time after time. "Calico Bass?" Albacore and Bluefin are being caught within 1 day range of San Diego...White Seabass are WFO at the Channel Islands...Dorado and Yellowtail are thick on nearly every kelp paddy or anything else found floating in our local waters...And I'm going out fishing for Calico Bass?

To me, Calico Bass have never been a glamour species, but rather an incidental catch. I was to learn differently on this trip. The 19 of us met at Pierpont Landing around 8 pm on Thursday night. While waiting to board, we introduced ourselves, discussed the (then) Dodger's losing streak, and shared-on-the-water war stories. We boarded about 9:20, signed in and got underway. Club President and Tournament Director, John Ballotti went over the rules and handed out goodie bags donated by Rick's Tackle in Long Beach, a sponsor for the 2nd year in a row.

The game plan was to make a stop at Catalina to see if we could get the candy bait to float, then make our way to San Clemente Island, for a morning with some hungry Calico Bass. What a beautiful night on the water, calm and flat as could be. Shorts and T-Shirts were adequate. I made my way to the bunkroom to try and catch a short nap before arriving at the squid fishing grounds. It was not to be, however, and we were able to jig up only a single squid thanks to the determined efforts of Steve Simon. The crew was able to scoop a couple of small net fulls, but we soon realized that on this night squid was just not meant to be.

We awakened to the smell of fresh brewed coffee, flat calm seas and bright sunshine. I grabbed a cup, stood at the rail soaking in the beauty and magnificence of this July morning. The water was like a sheet of glass that extended as far as the eye could see. As we approached the near-shore kelp beds, we were treated to the sight of boiling calico bass! They were here indeed! The boat anchored up and Tourney Director Ballotti gave the "Let em go" sign, and the race to see who would be the King of the Calicos had begun. It wasn't but a few moments before we watched the bass work their way up our chumline, when all of a sudden, rods started bending. Fish began coming over the rail faster than the crew could weigh them. If you had a live sardine in the water, you likely had a fish on within seconds. It wasn't long before the few of us, who were determined to throw plastics, finally gave in to the fact, that on this day, live bait would be the ticket...and besides, some of the other (bait fishing) contestants already had 4 or 5 fish to their credit and we needed to catch up!

While we all enjoyed one of the more prolific days of calico fishing you could ask for, there was one individual in particular who stood out amongst the crowd. This individual was Randy Sharon. Often, when on a fishing trip, there is one person who seems to be the hot stick. Well, on this day, Randy was not just hot...he was on fire! It was almost routine, that each time Randy would hand a fish to Capt. Ray to be weighed, the weight called out was in excess of 2 lbs.

Late in the tournament, it became apparent that due to Randy's antics, the individual crown was pretty much decided, and so the rest of us battled to try and land the 'Big Fish' title. However Randy had a plan of his own, and with just moments to go before the "lines out" command was called, Randy hauled over a toad calico which went 4 lbs. 10 oz. on the digital scale, good for big fish of the day. John quickly switched into the accounting mode, and with calculator in hand, tallied up the tournament totals. Soon thereafter, the results were posted and we had our 2006 King of the Calicos Individual Champion...Randy Sharon!

Randy not only weighed in an astounding 28 respectable fish, but his tournament 'ten fish bag' totaled a whopping 34 lbs. 10 oz. He was paired with Steve Simon in the team event, and their 20 fish bag total of 53 lbs. 9 oz. was enough to give them a clean sweep! Billy Vaughn and Dave Levinson were runners up at 37 lbs. 3 oz. The individual winners were Randy at 34lbs. 10 oz. with runner up Michael Godfrey at 27 lbs. 1 oz.

Following the tournament, we decided to try paddy hopping and managed a dozen or so yellowtail and 2 or 3 dorado. Icing on the cake for LARRC members!

What a wonderful day on the water.

A New Shark Repellent?

A hook outfitted with a small but powerful magnet could go a long way in preventing longline boats targeting tuna and swordfish from snaring sharks as bycatch.

The promise of the magnet's ability to repel sharks earned it the top prize in the World Wildlife Fund's annual International Smart Gear Competition, which seeks to support innovative, low cost solutions to reducing bycatch. For his novel efforts, the hook's inventor, Michael M. Herrmann, was awarded the contest's $25,000 grand prize.

Herrmann, an electrical engineer by training is a partner in a New Jersey research company called SharkDefense. The prize money will be used to further test and develop the product.

DELICATE MATTER

A married couple was in a terrible accident and the man's face was severely burned. The doctor told the husband that they couldn't graft any skin from his body because his was too skinny.

So the wife offered to donate some of her own skin. However, the only suitable skin from her body was her buttocks. Everyone agreed that they would honor this secret.

After the surgery was completed, everyone was astounded at the man's new face. He looked more handsome than ever;. Friends and relatives commented on his appealing youthful looks.

One, day he was alone with his wife, and he was overcome with emotion at her sacrifice. He said, "Dear, I just want to thank you for everything you did for me. How can I repay you?"

My darling, "she replied, "I get all the thanks I need every time I see your mother kiss you on the cheek."

One for the Books! Boundless Enthusiasm! A Very Supreme Time!

The much anticipated 5-day annual charter that I run on the Polaris Supreme got off to an 11 a.m. start on August 12th with an ultra-limited load of 18 people. We headed directly for Guadalupe Island with an arrival scheduled there about 8 a.m. Sunday.

Tommy Rothery at the helm concluded that this was our best option due to a lack of favorable reports on open ocean fishing. The lack of internet reports by the way is not always due to sloth on the part of the skippers. Some have really found that their catch information only invites competitors, including the commercial boats. Several other boats were already headed for the Cedros/Benitos area and indeed we found two boats already testing the waters at Guadalupe. The 73-degree water seemed just right for yellowtail and yellowfin. The weather was virtually perfect. Blue skies against the sere brown hills of the island. Those of you who haven't fished this island for a while will be happy to note that the Mexican Fisheries Dept. has imposed an additional license fee of $4. per day. This will be sold on the boat and you will be issued a wristlet and told that you must wear this if you intend fishing there. Look out for the gunboats!

Sunday and Monday were spent looking for the elusive fish although some nice yellowtail cooperated as well as a sprinkling of tuna. Whitey was also in attendance and chewed at least half the fish on these days. I am told these sharks have lived there all the time since their normal food is the pinnipeds that breed there. Lately however the arrival of the long-range boats has acted as a dinner bell for these huge monsters. Fish heads were tied to buoys, and with a restraining rope, tossed over the side. This was to act as a distraction but proved to be unsuccessful. And so we continued scratching, trying to horse in any hooked fish as fast as possible.

Monday night an attempt was made to get some squid for bait but this was only marginally successful. Of course the boat chummed their ample supply of sardines throughout but we also wanted to supplement those with Spanish Mackerels which were caught Tuesday evening after dark. With everyone sporting a bait rig—bait fishing is mandatory if you wish to use it—we filled one of the upper deck tanks in a couple of hours. As I recall, slightly over 50 hefty tuna were caught Sunday and Monday. Virtually all were over 40-50 lbs.

Towards late afternoon Tuesday, Tommy, who'd been making many moves, found us a high spot near the south end of Guadalupe which turned out to hold a large school. What a difference the mackerel made. All hell broke loose with at least half the group hooked up and fighting tuna simultaneously. The crew was up to their elbows untangling lines, passing rods around the anchor and helping those who could no longer lift. Fishermen's heaven! It was not unusual to see wraps with five people involved, several got spooled and I broke one of my rods. Mostly 30- and 40-lb line was used and the frenzy didn't stop until dark. You know that saying about hours of boredom with minutes of bedlam. This was it, people cursing, sweating, making a dash for the bait holders, always in another attempt to add one more to your hoard. Nobody worried about the absence of white sharks at this stop....maybe they were still sated from the prior days.

It was certainly a once-in-a-decade bite!. These frantic scenarios don't happen very often and we are SO fortunate to have the means and time to experience them. A most adequate substitute for a wild albacore bite.

Wednesday morning, another beautiful day, and we had to think about the 22-hr. ride back to San Diego. Awakened for breakfast at 5 a.m., we fished from dawn until about 11 a.m. Again the fish bit like crazy. Get your line in the water with a Spanish mackerel and you were on! More bedlam—more excitement. The school was such that Tommy had the deckhands chumming all our remaining bait, including the Spanish, to keep the school going so we could hand it off to the "American Angler". They arrived within a half hour and we learned later that they scored 90 fish that day!

Our total was about 100 tuna—didn't keep track of the yellowtail—of a very hefty size indeed. The jackpot fish was 105.4 (Phil Bruce), 2nd biggest was 87.8 (Dietmar Kruger), 3rd place was taken by my nephew Alex Rogger at 79.2—his personal best! We also saw a couple of wahoo come over the rail. One wound up as wahoo enchiladas.

One angler had a fish that turned out to weigh 110.2 but when he was almost spooled, a deckhand helped him to try to regain some line...this is a no no as far as the jackpot is concerned. Can't say enough good things about the crew nor the group of players, including some new guys. I can't think of anything negative that happened. Now that's a fun way to go fishing. Let's try it again next year!!!! This was not an LARRC trip although members, Barry Cohn, Sam Rubinfeld, John Seymour, John Eads and me, Eric Rogger, tried to hold up the traditions. ■

Report by Joel Greenberg.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) has released for public comment the Draft Environmental Impact Statement (DEIS) for consideration of marine reserves and marine conservation areas in the NOAA Channel Islands National Marine Sanctuary.

The DEIS contains proposed alternatives for a network of marine zones in the sanctuary. Also included is a description of the affected environment, and an evaluation and comparison of environmental and economic consequences including cumulative impacts.

Two types of zones are being considered: marine reserves and marine conservation areas. Under the preferred alternative, all extractive activities (e.g. removal of any sanctuary resource) and injury to sanctuary resources would be prohibited in all zones of the sanctuary designated as marine reserves. Certain lobster fishing and recreational fishing for pelagic species would be allowed within zones of the sanctuary designated as marine conservation areas, while all other extraction and injury would be prohibited. Proposed sanctuary regulatory changes are presented and analyzed in the DEIS.

The DEIS will undergo extensive public review from Aug. 11, 2006 through Oct. 10, 2006, including public hearings scheduled for Sept. 26, 2006 and Sept. 28, 2006 in Ventura and Santa Barbara. All comments must be received or postmarked by Oct. 10, 2006 at the sanctuary office at 113 Harbor Way, Suite 150, Santa Barbara, CA 93109, by email at cinmsreserves.deis@noaa.gov or by fax at (805) 568-1582. Call (805) 884-1472 to get copies of the DEIS.

Public Hearings are scheduled for:

Tues. 9/26 6:15 to 9:00 pm
Sheraton Four Points Hotel, San Buenaventura Ball Room
1050 Schooner Drive, Ventura CA

Thurs 9/28 6:15 to 9:00 pm
